Introduction

Traveling with a lot of people, we often encounter problems with both airlines and distractions from other passengers. In particular, passengers who create problems and are most talked about are passenger who are children. If their parents are able to deal with their children more or less, it may cause other passengers to not feel bad. But for passengers traveling with children who do not care to take care of them, it will make a lot of discontent for other passengers.

Based on the news spread in social media and feedback, about traveling children, who are able to manage their children and resulting in the child traveling with it is very disturbing to other passengers and causing many passengers to be dissatisfied and not good experiences in that flight, From receiving the news in a bad way from social networks We see Passengers who traveling with their children who may be disturbed or not What are your feelings or opinions with these children? And how do they solve the problems, we will look at both the positive thinking and Negative of passengers traveling with children Because we do not expect that we will be able to sit close to what type of passengers

Research methodology

Objective

To study about Positive and Negative thinking about passenger who travelling with children

To study how they solve the problem

Flying can be aggravating, stressful, and nerve wracking even under the best circumstances. So adding children into the mix is a recipe for disaster, but for parents who need to get somewhere in a hurry, flying with their little ones is a necessary evil. Still, other passengers aren't always patient or understanding.

Positive and Negative thinking about passenger who travelling with children

The majority of cases were caused by children who cried uncontrollable, causing them to not be able to handle the problem. And passengers very serious, considered to be a very bad flight for them and some passengers revile that passenger or showing signs of discontent

They will evince to passengers who are not prepared or do not deal with more problems than passengers who are responsible for their children.

How they solve the problem

- Schedule the flight time to coincide with nap or bed time

Ideally your baby will sleep for much of the flight. To help him do that, book a flight that coincides with nap time or bed time. There's a good chance that the ambient noise on the plane will lull your baby to sleep anyway, but it helps if the flight is during a time that your baby will be sleepy. I took the red eye to Italy and my daughter slept for almost the entire duration of the flight, since she would have been asleep for the night anyway.

- Choose seats strategically

Infants under two years old can fly for free if they sit on an adult's lap. That said, if you can afford the extra airfare, it might be worth it to buy your baby his own seat. (You can bring an infant car seat on board and strap your baby in to the seat.)

If you're flying with someone else, you may want to book a window and aisle seat (leaving the middle open) in the hopes that the middle seat won't get filled. And even if it does, there's a good chance that the person will switch with you as no one wants to sit between two people who are passing a baby back and forth.

Just before boarding, ask the gate agent if there are any empty seats. You might just get lucky and get a seat for your child.

- Be prepared for the flight

Bring more diapers, wipes, food, and spare clothing (for both you and the baby) than you think you'll need. You do not want to run out of the essentials on the flight. Also bring enough toys and books to entertain your baby during the flight. You always want to have a backup plan to distract the baby if she starts to melt down.

- Plan for takeoff and landing

Your baby will probably have the toughest time during takeoff and landing, since her ears may bother her when the air pressure changes. To prevent the baby from crying, make sure that she is either feeding or sleeping during that time. Any sort of sucking motion will help, so give her a bottle or pacifier during the ascent and descent.

- Be courteous to the other passengers on the plane

Some parents apologize to fellow passengers in advance, while others even offer gift bags with ear plugs and candy to passengers. That's a nice gesture, but it's not necessary. Still, a basic modicum of courtesy will go far with your fellow passengers.

If all else fails and your baby melts down, just take a deep breath and stay calm. Unfortunately, babies cry. That's what they do. Just do your best to comfort and quiet your child as quickly as possible.

Conclusion

Young passengers are not a crime, Research has shown that most passengers have been troubled by disturbed and disgruntled children, Have solved the problem by themselves or told the parents of that child If possible, do not want to travel with children again, But they can't choose This shows that children are seen as a problem, Just because the parents didn't care and prepared enough to fly with other passengers most of them will meet with parents who are not interested in this problem more than parents who are well prepared not to let the child screaming or their child passengers make the problem Or is seen as a problem.

Discussion and Recommendation

In my opinion, I think Getting to travel with children is a very biggest thing because you have to make sure that you are able to handle the problems that children will cause to disturb other passengers. From Social Media, who gave out information about dissatisfaction with traveling with children, causing the child to be seen as a problem But in fact, should be a parent if preparing to be ready to provide services with others passenger. Of course, have many parents who are responsible and well prepared for travel with other passengers. It is considered a worthy thing to do and very admirable
